Following brief religious services at 6:45 o'clock the youngsters began to arrive, and before long it was estimated that more than 200 were present in the assembly room. Rev. J. F. Bennett, superintendent of the mission, and W. H. Ramsey, its treasurer, were on hand to take charge of the entertainment.

There were two Christmas trees and a Santa Claus distributed presents to all the little ones. They included cakes, candies, nuts, sweaters, mittens and gloves, warm stockings and other things designed to please children. An interesting program of entertainment for the youngsters also was provided. Luther Montgomery also wired a request that the police make a rigid investigation to determine the circumstances under which his brother was overcome by gas. It is stated that Earl Montgomery Friday night went to the 6th street house and rented a room for a week, paying the rent in advance.

Found Unconscious in Room. The roomer reached the house in an automobile, the police were told, and during his brief conversation with the landlady he said something about the prospective purchase of an automobile

An ambulance was summoned and the unconscious man was taken to the hospital. It was reported to the police that the window of the room occupied by Montgomery was not entirely closed and the gas turned on. The young man said nothing about the house to suggest that he was despondent or that he contemplated taking his life, it is stated, and his landlady thinks the gas was left turned on as a result of an accident.

"An effort is made to handle all sorts of inquiries and turn them over to the proper bureau in case there is no publication which would supply the information requested. Nearly two score of periodicals are issued by the government ranging from the National lication which would supply the infor-

"People are being educated to an understanding of the value of publications and instead of asking their congressmen for free copies they are beginning to recognize their obligation spent part of the day in Juarez, going gressmen for free copies they are beginning to recognize their obligation to pay for what they receive. Documents are sold at the cost of mechanical production. In ten years sales have increased from about $5,000 a year to $200,000, and it is expected that in a little while this service of the government through the office of the superintendent of documents will be self-supporting.

"Postmasters hang up placards and handbills which, in display advertising, suggest the service which every citizen can secure through documents.
Some of the display circulars give a few selected titles covering a wide range. The manufacturer in a city may learn that for 5 cents he can secure a sixty-one page pamphlet on the Postage Stamps Refused. "One obvious handicap to the widest opular use of this service, however, is the statement which appears on all these lists and catalogues: 'Postage cepted.' The refusal of the govern-was not on the Atenas' passenger list and was not found aboard the steamer when she sailed. His wife said she puts the stamps in his pocket and turns in a nickel.

"The regulations of the Post Office Department are due to the fact that the pay of the 48,000 postmasters of fourth class post offices—and there are only 8,500 others—is in proportion to their sales of stamps. It is assumed that this indicates the amount of work the postmaster does in handling mail. If, therefore, people buy stamps not to put on envelopes but to send as remittances, the postmaster gets his pay for less work.

"You have no reverence for red tape if you do not solemnly appreciate how much your 5 cents' worth of postage stamps would affect the pay of 48,000 postmasters.

"No greater mistake could be made such difficulty and delay as does exist. A large corporation which had been paying such an agency in Washington $100 a month for information concerning contracts found that the government itself wants to supply such information.

"In Washington your average govern-ment official has a wide open door. This reception may be partly for po-litical effect, and it may waste some valuable time, but it is worth while to let the average citizen feel that all have access to the government.

"While the Library of Congress is especially valuable to any one who can use its vast resources through visiting the splendid building in which they are housed, its growing service to the country at large is more and more ap-housed, its growing service to the country at large is more and more appreciated. Its monthly list of all the publications which are issued by the states is of unusual value to those who want to keep posted on activities outside their own commonwealths. Inquiries from people who live where local library facilities are lacking receive especial attention; bibliographies and references to the nearest library are furnished. The supplying of printed catalogue cards at cost to hundreds of libraries throughout the country saves the local libraries many thousands of dollars and forms a direct service to every library user.

"The National Capital as a source of information radiates not only the diverse knowledge collected and produced by government bureaus. That afforded by privately organized social and civic agencies is by no means inconsiderable. Washington is the headquarters for a score or two of national organizations, such as the American Civic Association, National Voters' League, Carnegle Institution, American Federation of Labor, Chamber of Commerce of the United States, National Geographic Society, American Forestry Association, American Peace Society and Carnegie Endowment for International Peace.

Capital a Demonstration City.

Capital a Demonstration City.

"With the progress achieved under the magnificent plans to make Washington the most beautiful of capitals, it does not seem too much to hope for similar progress toward making it a demonstration city in municipal government. There is at present discussion over the proportion of funds for local needs, which should be conlocal needs, which should be con-tributed respectively by the taxpayers of the District and by the federal gov-ernment. There should be liberal na-tional support for a civic program in the administration of Washington, de-signed to try out.
